Volunteer recruitment help coming

BY SYLVIA COLE
Review Staff

A new program meant to attract more volunteers in Didsbury is expected to launch this March.

Nicole Aasen Community Services Manager asked council to allow Didsbury FCSS to open a volunteer centre, and hire a professional in the volunteer sector to help develop a program.

She said her motivation to start the program came from organizations "crying for volunteers."

"The volunteers that are in a lot of these groups now are senior citizens ... volunteerism is so prevalent with our seniors because it's always been a part of their life. They grew up contributing to their community that way but with the younger generation volunteerism is looked at a little different, it isn't the same."

The most current statistics from the Canada Survey of Giving, Volunteering and Participating suggest only 34 per cent of senior citizens volunteer, the lowest for any age group. However, seniors volunteer on average more than any other group, averaging 254 hours a person a year, followed by 216 hours from people 45 to 54.

This is something Lions Club president Ray Lea has noticed. He said younger people will come out to help for a few hours here and there, but the commitment to join the group isn't there.

"I think one of the main factors is the economy," he said. "It's not as easy anymore as it once was, it takes two people working to afford a house and raise a family," he said, adding that people are a lot busier in that regard than they were 20, 30 years ago. He also thinks with the increase of technology, there's more for people to do. "There's more TV shows, computer games," he said. "People almost have too much to do. There wasn't always as much to do so people got involved."

Aasen wants the program to help recruit and keep volunteers involved.

"We need to look at how to take care of them. Are they insured if something happens to them, are we making sure they're screened so they're appropriate for what we're using them for," she said as examples.

Shirley Dorin, a director for the museum said communication between organizations would be the most effective means of finding enough volunteers for various events and organizations.

"Working with people and getting to know people is the only way to get anything done," she explained. "There's not enough (volunteers) to go around. The key to the whole thing is to reach out to other groups."

She said many of the volunteers with the museum are senior citizens and as a group they've put a lot of work into raising awareness about the museum.

"We're an outstanding group, but when we burn out will there be replacements?"

The project is expected to take until March before it can launch. The funding for the program, at a cost of $16,491.88, will come from the FCSS Town Program funds.

Southridge park petition works

Council votes in favour of scrapping natural park

BY SYLVIA COLE
Review Staff

An attempt to host a naturally maintained park in Didsbury failed after council sided last week with a 50 signature petition requesting the municipality maintain the area.

Council's decision not to maintain Southridge Valley Park was made in 2008 because of concerns for the safety of maintenance workers trimming grass along the steep ravines.

"We thought, let's try this natural look we've seen and heard other communities were trying and see whether or not it would suit or fit that area," said Mayor Brian Wittal of the decision.

He said the town heard only a few concerns from residents after the first year so council decided to continue with it.

But many residents from the Southridge neighbourhood were upset with the look of the park, concerned about an increase in mice, upset that money was put into creating pathways last year that can't be used, and concerned about the possible fire hazard of long grass growing up against homes that border the park.

"I empathize with the people ... It's unacceptable to be doing that. In some way, shape or form we have to clean up," said Councillor Gayle Veno.

Councillor Bob Davidson said he checked out the park and agreed with the fire hazard but didn't feel there were as many weeds as people were saying. "As for the whole thing being mowed, I don't like it. But it's not my area, I don't live on it so I don't think I should have final say. It depends how people want the area maintained," he said.

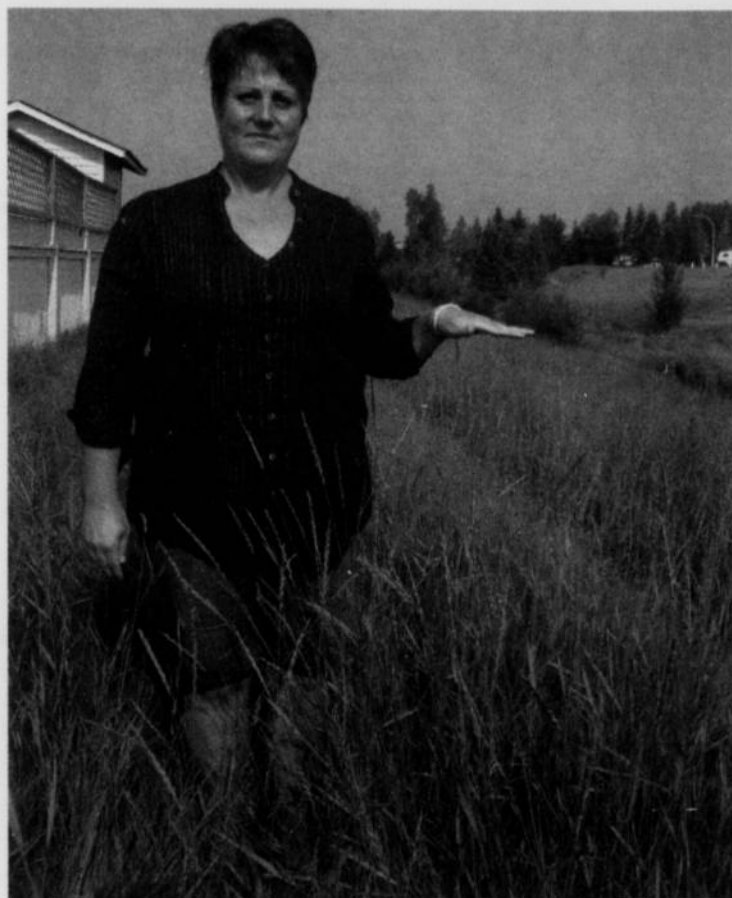

Councillor Ernie Ryckman thought the park would be partially maintained meaning the area with the steep ravines would be the only natural area.

"I think we may have been remiss for not getting public works to detail what partial maintenance is," he said.

Council's decision to change maintenance levels from partial to full pleased residents who let out cheers and started clapping during council meeting last week.

"I think it's awesome, I'm glad they're doing it again and we can get back into that park," said Terry Dolan who was unable to attend the meeting last week. Dolan got the petition started and asked neighbours to sign after being told by public works manager Charlie Macdonald to present a petition with a minimum of 50 signatures to council.

Work on the park is meant to start immediately with the grass getting trimmed because of safety concerns.

Artwalk concludes fourth year

BY LEA SMALDON
Review Staff

The addition of Sundre and Innisfail as stops on ArtWalk 2010 helped increase exposure to Didsbury artists as well as local businesses, say organizers.

The fourth annual event which wrapped up last Tuesday featured the works of 33 visual artists displayed in 33 locations scattered around four towns this year.

This was the first year Innisfail was included in the Wellspring Visual ArtNetwork event and marked Sundre's reintroduction after a year's hiatus. Olds and Didsbury continued participation without a break.

Artists' work was displayed in participating businesses, non-profit store fronts, and professional offices, for show and sale from June 26 - Sept. 7. Customers could get a chance sighting of the work by simply patronizing participating locations or taking the tour of each town's artwalk.

Wellspring president Michele Brewster, a painter from Bowden, said communities benefit from being involved.

"There's a lot of people that do the walk. They go from community to community. They look at the art, they shop and they eat and I think it really helps the community as well," Brewster said.

And it's an opportunity for artists to get out of their studios and showcase their work in a public setting.

"The artists get a chance to show their work. I mean nobody sees it hanging on your living room wall or stored in the back closet or wherever. So it gets our work out there," Brewster said.

Seven locations in Didsbury featured the artworks of one local artist, four from Olds, and one each from Sundre and Innisfail.

Dee Poisson showed her mixed media artwork at Didsbury Value Drug Mart and Shoppers Drug Mart in Olds.

Ulla-La Boutique featured paintings by Olds' Marjorie Vetter.

Fellow Olds resident Cindy Boffey had her works displayed at the Didsbury Review and Carroll Smith's silk work was at the White Raven Emporium. The Gilded Gallery featured Olds' Robert Braun's creative wood-working.

Innisfail's Ozi Cruz-Lahtinen displayed artwork at Just the Bakery and Didsbury AG Foods featured creations from Sundre's Barbara Bell.

Didsbury's Gail Kohut was paired with The Grind at the Co-op Shopping Centre in Innisfail and the Innisfail Province hosted the works of Didsbury's Cliff Thompson. Brad Studier had his photography displayed in Life's Treasures in Olds and the works of fellow Didsbury resident Leonard Robinson were also featured in Stang's Health Centre in Olds.

Alberta, Canadian economy will be impacted by U.S.: Hirsch

BY PAUL FREY
For the Review

The Alberta and Canadian economies could be in for a period of very sluggish growth over the next few years until the United States rebounds from its sluggish output. That was the message one of Alberta's leading economists told a group of Olds and District Chamber of Commerce members at a breakfast meeting on Wednesday.

Using a weather analogy to illustrate the situation, Todd Hirsch, senior economist at ATB Financial, told the group assembled at the Olds Evergreen Centre that Alberta's economic outlook is sunny with some cloudy periods in the near term. He said because of low natural gas prices and lower conventional crude oil prices, the Alberta government may see some uncertainty in the near term in regard to revenues. Hirsch said while current oil prices in the $70 to $80 per barrel range is a relatively good price, he predicts continued price volatility because of investor uncertainty.

"We're gonna continue to see these prices bounce up and down," he said.

He said plunge in oil prices earlier this summer was due to concerns over economies in Europe.

He said the low prices for natural gas will continue to plague provincial coffers and said it needs to be in the $6 to $7 range per million cubic feet if the province is to turn around provincial revenues. Near the end of last week it was trading in the $3.70-range per million cubic feet. Hirsch said he doesn't see the price spiking past the current range anytime soon.

Hirsch said because the oilsands are on a longer timetable, he foresees a good future for that sector, although he said the current pressure being put on the industry by environmentalists will recede in time. While he said companies have a long way to go on improving the environmental record of the industry, he said they are improving.

While Alberta isn't leading the pack in terms of job growth (9,000 part-time positions were created across the province in July) Hirsch said the situation is still relatively stable, with Alberta having the third lowest unemployment rate in Canada, lagging only Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

"We're still probably one of the better job markets," he told the group.

As for the agricultural industry, Hirsch said he sees brighter times ahead for grain and oilseed producers but continued struggles for livestock producers. He said while demand in both India and China will bring good news to grain producers, ranchers will continue to struggle with a high Canadian dollar and U.S. producers that want to keep Canadian livestock and their products from crossing the border.

What happens in the U.S. generally over the next few years will have an impact on Alberta because the U.S. buys a lot of energy exports from Alberta.

"I see a lot of stagnant growth in the U.S. for probably the next few years. It's not going to be a really pretty situation. The unemployment rate is likely to remain a problem and as a result the U.S. economy is going to kind of sputter. That will drag down the global economy and Canada's economy as well," he said, noting that growth in both India and China could help to keep commodity prices stronger than they otherwise might be.

Workplace safety a public interest

DAN SINGLETON

The Stelmach government has announced plans to make more information available to the public about workplace fatalities and injuries caused by on-the-job accidents and mishaps.

The change will come into effect this fall and will make Alberta one of the most open jurisdictions in North America when it comes to providing information on workplace safety, says Thomas Lukaszuk, Alberta minister of employment and immigration.

"This is part of our ten-point plan for achieving greater transparency and accountability for occupational health and safety in Alberta," said Lukaszuk. "We want to give people a sense of what is coming as this is new territory for safety information in Canada. It will be much more than what any other jurisdiction is providing."

Under the plan anyone interested will be able to access information about worksite injuries and fatalities involving most WCB insured employers, he said.

Information on each employer will include the following:

- Number of lost-time claims.
- Lost-time claim rate.
- Number of fatalities.
- If the employer holds a Certificate of Recognition (COR).

Industry and provincewide lost-time claim rates for comparison purposes.

As well, employer records and statistics will be provided regarding safety performance. The statistics will include the injury and illness records of each industry, characterized by the type of person working, type of event or the type of injury on this site.

Both the opposition Liberals and NDP have been calling on the Stelmach government to identify companies with substandard safety records and those that repeatedly flout safety laws and rules.

While the vast majority of Alberta companies have good workplace safety records, including those in West Central Alberta, there are, unfortunately, still some employers that don't put enough time and effort into worker health and safety.

Alberta workers and their families have every right to know that workplaces are safe and that employers will be held accountable when it comes to their respective safety policies and practices.

Increased transparency is also good for Alberta employers, ensuring that companies that make reducing or eliminating worker accidents a priority are recognized for their worthwhile efforts.

On the other hand, companies that ignore the health and well-being of workers should rightly find themselves exposed to ever-increasing public scrutiny.

The Stelmach government should be applauded for this new effort to make Alberta a leader when it comes to worker safety and employer accountability.

With all the 'bad press' the province has been getting over the oil sands these days, the announcement that Alberta workers, employers and the Stelmach government are working closely together on this important issue is welcome news.

Long-gun registry is fool's gold

KEVIN GAUDET

A vote to kill Candice Hoeppner's bill to scrap the long-gun registry is scheduled for Sept. 22 in the House of Commons. With numbers looking like the bill will survive, the long-gun registry appears doomed. As a result, the registry's defenders are getting more and more desperate.

The registry has wasted some $2 billion and drains at least $106 million a year more from taxpayers from all three levels of government.

Police chief bureaucrats defend the registry because it gives them an excuse to purchase more computers, hire more staff and get larger budgets. However, the public get that the long-gun registry doesn't make them safer; it's simply adds more bureaucracy to a process that already requires gun owners to be licensed before obtaining a firearm.

Defenders frequently trot out the statistic that the registry is queried 11,000 times a day by officers. However, this is because all queries of the Canadian Police Information Centre automatically check the registry. If you've been pulled over by police in traffic, it's more than likely the gun registry has been queried. Of course, police are trained to assume guns are always present because criminals don't register their firearms.

It's worth noting that police chiefs have refused to commission a poll of their rank and file officers. No doubt they fear being proven to be out of step with the officers they purport to represent. An Edmonton officer conducted an online survey for Blue Line magazine and found 92 per cent of those officers surveyed favoured scrapping the registry. The survey revealed that police fear inaccurate data from the registry is affecting police safety in every province and territory.

Doubt about the usefulness of the registry is not limited to police officers. The Angus Reid poll reveals widespread Canadian belief that the long-gun registry has been a failure; 72 per cent think it has been ineffective and/or had no effect on preventing crime. The survey further revealed a plurality - 44 per cent - support scrapping it compared to 35 per cent that want it kept (21 per cent were undecided).

Importantly, despite a ramped up effort by defenders of the registry over the past several months, these numbers have budged little since a similar poll taken last November. Support for scrapping the registry is far deeper than the traditional urban/rural split in Canada.

Taxpayer-funded lobby and interest groups predictably beg for more and bigger government programs, regardless of their utility. However, it's disappointing to see the chiefs of police join this bandwagon. Canadians should be mindful that the chiefs do not necessarily reflect the views of rank and file officers across the country. It's likely any taxpayer-funded campaign of theirs to sell the public on benefits of the registry will prove no different than selling pyrite - fool's gold. Fortunately, the registry's shine is long gone.

Kevin Gaudet is the federal director of the Canadian Taxpayers Federation

Letters to the editor

Bill C-32 could threaten Canadian educational material in schools

As Canada's MPs head back to Ottawa, readers should know they will soon be wrestling with a bill to reform Canadian copyright law that will impact the vibrancy of Canadian values and heritage reflected in Canadian schools.

At issue is Bill C-32 and proposed "exceptions" from copyright for educators. At first glance it could appear positive. Schools won't have to pay to make reproductions of textbooks and other materials developed to meet the requirements of provincial curricula. They will save money today. But Canadian children will be losers, tomorrow.

Canada's values and heritage are reflected in Canadian schools because Canadian-based publishers and authors develop materials to populate the curriculum of your school system with local examples and relevant Canadian content. Put most starkly, Canadian children learn to spell Yellowknife before Yellowstone because these folks invest money and creativity in the expectation of compensation when their work is used.

Right now, schools and universities pay licences to reproduce educational resources en masse. They often prefer to make reproductions instead of purchasing more originals. It's cheaper. But under C-32, they may not even have to compensate publishers and authors for that.

Under C-32 not only could existing revenues from mass reproduction dry up, the market for new texts could be irreversibly damaged. Instead of purchasing multiple class sets, school boards may be able to purchase fewer books and then replicate them with no compensation for creators.

Who will want to invest in Canadian educational materials under these rules?

This is not about school children making copies of their favourite poems: the education exceptions may permit mass, high-volume copying (equivalent to millions of books every year) without compensation to the creators and publishers who invested their creativity, skill, money and effort to produce this content. Educators around the world, including in the U.S., need to buy licences to engage in this activity.

Canada's creative industry has lined up in opposition to C-32. Across Canada, songwriters, performers, artists, authors, publishers, and the groups that represent them, have voiced alarm over C-32.

Parents and taxpayers should also be concerned about the future of Canadian values and heritage in Canadian schools.

No gun registry means we act in ignorance

The gun registry debate boils down to this. On the one side, the registry is understood to be a step towards curbing support for arms and militancy. And on the other, the registry is seen as interfering with benign activities like duck hunting.

Firearm management is particularly difficult because our good neighbour to the south manufactures and distributes guns like bottled water - including firearms that are not appropriate for duck hunting or much else except combat.

There is a real and pragmatic difference between a duck hunter's shotgun and handguns or automatic weapons. To sort out who has what kind of weapons where, the first thing to do is ask the public, "what do you have?" Interpreting the answer requires a database of "registered" firearms. Of course such a registry does not solve the issue of the circulation of assault weapons but it is a step toward attempting to distinguish between them and more benign firearms.

We do not need combat weapons in the public domain. We can approach the problem in one of two ways. Either we proceed with facts or we act in ignorance and blindly hope we know truth from fiction. No gun registry means less facts and turns getting to the heart of the issue - militancy and crime - a more ignorant effort.

Many children suffer terrible neglect.

We can't abandon them too.

There are so many heartbreaking cases of children who have fallen deeply through the cracks. Some even become pawns of the sex trade. Their childhoods are wasted by abuse, desperation and addiction.

Drugs found in vehicle

Improper driving has landed a woman from Olds in trouble twice in one year.

Didsbury RCMP pulled over a woman driving in downtown Didsbury last Thursday night after she passed someone on the right hand side and proceeded to turn right without signalling.

When pulled over, the woman "unrolled her window and there was an overwhelming smell" of marijuana said RCMP.

Kelly Niemeyer, 31, of Olds was arrested for possession of 54 grams or two ounces of freshly cut marijuana. And this isn't the first time police have caught her.

On February 21 Niemeyer was pulled over for an improper turn, and police discovered 28 grams of marijuana in her possession. She is currently before the courts with that charge.

Niemeyer was released on her current arrest with promise to appear before Didsbury provincial court October 25.

Didsbury's 24th Terry Fox Run ready to go

The 24th annual Terry Fox Run in Didsbury will be taking place on Sunday at 1 p.m. at the Memorial Complex. Registration will begin at 12:30 p.m.

Last year's run raised $4,645 in Didsbury. Combined, the community has raised $91,424 in all the events over the years.

This year is the 30th anniversary of the Terry Fox Run in Canada.

The iconic image of Terry running along long and lonely roads during the 143 days of his Marathon of Hope does not convey the full picture of that historic effort. If the photographer were to widen his lens, there would appear the tens, hundreds, even thousands of Canadians lining those very roads cheering

Terry on and taking inspiration from his example.

When Terry recognized that he would not be able to complete his marathon, he instead bequeathed his mission to those very Canadians who kept him going day in and day out.

He knew before his death that there would be an annual Terry Fox Run in cities, towns, hamlets and villages across the country. It was our turn to inspire Terry Fox.

And almost 30 years later, Canadians adopted

Terry's mission of finding a cure for all cancers with an enthusiasm and passion that has done him proud.

In keeping with the approach of its founder, The Terry Fox Run (1981 - ) is an innovative and volunteer-led event, all-inclusive, non-competitive, with no corporate sponsorship, incentives or fundraising minimums.

It has become a fall tradition in Canada to gather your friends and family, lace on your shoes, bring our pledge sheets and attend your favourite Terry Fox Run site.

Scholarships awarded to students

Seven Didsbury teens were awarded scholarships last Tuesday from The town of Didsbury totalling $6,250.

The scholarships are part of the summer student scholarship program where students receive $500 after their first year of work with the town, $1,000 after the second year and $1,500 after the third.

Emily Leggette, Charlyee O'Dell and Lauren Smith were present to receive their awards. Kristen Kurtz, Michael Northcott, Daniel Neuberger and David Smither were absent but also received scholarships.

New positions at town office

Melissa Trotter was appointed by council to serve as a bylaw enforcement officer.

Trotter was hired by the town as animal control officer on July 28 this year and will continue with animal bylaw enforcement along with new duties.

A contract with animal control ended in 2010 and the town did not renew.

"We felt we would get more value by putting that money towards bringing a part-time person in to do that for us and over time we can look at making the position full time," said mayor Brian Wittal.

Council also appointed Rosanne Adams for a volunteer position as a member-at-large to the Community Service Board for a two-year term.

Promo event for artists approved

Council approved the use of the Didsbury Train Station in the amount of $300 for Sharon Tsiras who wants to start up a Didsbury art council that would promote the arts and music within the community. Local artists and musicians would be invited to showcase their work at no charge to themselves or the public.

Three events would be held in the fall and winter and would allow local artists a chance to introduce themselves to the public.

In brief

BY SYLVIA COLE
Review Staff

"I think it's worth it if it brings people into our community," said councillor Bob Davidson.

Arena upgrades approved

Expect lighting upgrades over the ice rinks at Didsbury Memorial Complex.

Council approved $17,134 to upgrade the lighting system over both ice surfaces. The money will come from part of the remaining MSI operating funds.

Nicole Aasen, manager of community services, presented council with the proposal last Tuesday night explaining the lights were in poor condition and buzzed constantly.

It was suggested the upgrade would pay for itself within five years in reduced electricity bills.

Councillor Ernie Ryckman asked if there were any figures to back up this claim and if it would be possible to apply for any federal funding that supports green initiatives.

Aasen said due to the limited time before the ice is put in, it might not be possible to get a grant.

Council approved for the money to be taken from the MSI operating fund unless other grant funding can be sourced.

New patrolling unit considered

Olds Commissionaires Security Solutions will soon be patrolling in Didsbury between 9 p.m. and 5 a.m.

Council moved to direct administration to enter into an agreement with the patrolling company that will cost $2 per checked building.

The buildings include the Memorial Complex, the town office, Public Works and Didsbury Neighbourhood Place bringing the total to $2,920 a year.

"I think it's a great idea. More people out there checking between 9 p.m. and 5 a.m. It's when a lot of shenanigans happen," said councillor Ernie Ryckman.

The possibility of getting businesses on board and adding a fee to their utility bill was discussed as a possibility.

"I think any particular presence would make a wonderful difference and if that could be emphasized there are times that are worse than others, such as summer. But Olds Garage has had it for some time and they still suffer from severe vandalism," said councillor Bob Davidson.

Leaky roof gets repairs

Leaks discovered in the roof of the chamber of commerce building will cost $65,000 to repair.

Because the building is a Provincial Historic Site, 50 per cent of the costs could be paid through the Municipal Heritage Partnership Program but reimbursement is not guaranteed.

The project was not budgeted for 2010 but council approved the repairs with the source of available funding to be determined by administration.

Albertans have a say in expanding
our electricity system.

Alberta is outgrowing its electricity system.

Critical transmission upgrades are needed if Alberta is to grow and prosper. This includes the AltaLink Western Alberta Transmission Line: albertaelectricityfuture.com. Albertans have a stake in the outcome. Consultation on route options is underway. No decisions have been made as to where new transmission infrastructure will be located, and none will be, until residents have been consulted.

Albertans continue to have a say on where transmission lines are located. For any route that is put to the Alberta Utilities Commission for consideration, the Alberta Utilities Commission will hold a public hearing for affected Albertans to provide their input on issues concerning public safety, land use and environmental impacts. Landowners' issues will be heard, taken into account and affected landowners must be fairly compensated.

To learn more about Alberta's electricity system, the real need for upgrades, and how you can provide input, visit www.energy.alberta.ca.
